SATURDAY MORNING, JANUARY 15, 1859.

PERSONALITIES IN THE PRESS. If personalities were not sufficiently disgusting in themselves, the consideration that Jan. they are never popular with decent people should induce those who are prone to indulge in them to substitute something else which might do some good in the world, and perhaps increase their influence. It is a small Feb business to pander to depraved appetites, and if it pays, which is very doubtful, the money so earned defiles the fingers of him who earns it. No one would like to acknowledge that he had grown rich in the slave trade, and yet it would be easy to show that this has not been so hurtful to the bodies or souls of men as this low trade in the reputations of others. Even genuine wit cannot atone for Apr or adorn personalities, and the feeble attempts at wit which usually characterize the deliverances of bilious writers, are only calculated to excite pity or a less gentle emotion in their readers.

To say nothing about the morality of the habit, it is certainly more politic to speak of others with kindness—and the man who cul-tivates a kindly spirit will not only escape Jun many disagreeable rubs, but will be happier and will wield a wider influence. More can be accomplished with the erring by kind expostulation than by bitterness and recrimination. There are some evils which should J'ly be sternly rebuked, but this may be done without personalities, and the rebuke will have a better effect. The characters of publie men are not public property, at least not so much so as to give the public a right to be abusive. A man does not cease to be a man when he accepts an office, and he is entitled to as much consideration and respect while he occupies it as before. If he is guilty of positive derilections of duty, it is quite possible to point out his errors with sufficient candor, and at the same time with some little dor, and at the same time with some little flippant and familiar style of discourse which would not be tolerated in any society of ordi- William H. Fowle, W. T. Harper, and George H. nary refinement, is no more admirable when it appears in print. Egotists are particularly prone to be personal. They think they cannot possibly say weak and foolish things, yet nobody agrees with them in this supposition. Smart speeches, which would not be very creditable to mail boys, are enunciated with the utmost W. T. Harper, Robert G. Violett, and Robert coolness, and they expect the world to be Brockett. overwhelmed with admiration of their delicate humor. The fact is, the world has not time to hunt for the concealed inuendo, and in the majority of cases, has not skill enough Richard M. Smith, George H. Smoot, and Wesley to detect the latent humor. The greatest misfortune to the egotist is his inability to August respect superior age, station and wisdom, and his coincident proneness to fancy that wisdom will die with him. Dignity, wit, common sense, influence, are all swallowed up in his insane and solitary admiration of his own individuality-instead of sparkling like a star in his course, he emits the feeble and fitful ray of the glow worm, which vanishes as suddenly as it appears, and is forgotten as soon as it vanishes .- Balt. ### THE OBTUSE JUDGE.

A certain California Judge was noted for his obtuseness in all cases where there was a laugh to come in. On one occasion the District Attorney desired to have a case continued, in which one Sarah Mony was a witness and she was absent-he remarked:-

"Your honor, I cannot try this case without Sarah Mony" (ceremony:) there was some laughing but his honor couldn't see the

A few days after as he was riding home alone, the revelation of the fun of the Attorney's remark flashed suddenly on his mind-he laughed immoderately, and continued laughing very loudly as he rode up to his own door. His wife, attracted by the unusual phenomenon of the Judge's merriment, came out and inquired,

"Why, my dear, what are you laughing at?" "I am laughing at one of the District Attorney's jokes," and straightway the Judge collapsed again in a convulsion fit of laughter.
"Well, what was the joke," said the wife.

"Why," replied the Judge "the Attorney said when I urged him to proceed with the trial of a case, "Sir, I cannot try it without Mary Mony!" "But," said the wife, "I don't see the point of that joke." "Nor I neither, just now," said the Judge, musingly, "but I did a few minutes ago!"

WORSE THAN LEAP YEAR.

The ladies of Schuyler county, in New York, have a way, peculiarly their own, of intimidating the men into matrimony .-The Ruchville Times says that one day last week, at Huntsville, a young woman, who had, or pretended to have, some claims upon the hand and heart of Mr. Thomas Watt, called at his store and demanded that he should either marry her or submit to the effects of the bullet. Mr. W. refused either horn of the dilemma, when she banged away. The ball struck pretty near his centre, but hitting a rib, passed around and out, doing no material damage. The young lady was arrested and tried, but Esquire Benson dismissed the charge, and let her go.
